Notification of Product Obsolescence

19th June 2007

To Whom It May Concern:

We have completed our periodic review of products as related to life cycle and raw material availability with regards to our SIP20C Non Isolated Point-of-Load product family. Unfortunately, the components used in this device are becoming difficult to get and one of our component supplier's has issued us a last-time-buy notice. In order to maximize value delivered and improve overall efficiency; we are discontinuing the SIP20C product family.

We sincerely appreciate your business and will make every effort to work with you during your transition to a new DC-DC Converter. In most cases of obsolescence, a new advanced model has been introduced to meet your electrical requirements. With advancements in technology over the years since this product was introduced (2001), our latest DC-DC Converters offer better efficiencies and smaller footprints.

The table below describes the standard and modified standard SIP20C model numbers that you have previously purchased which will be discontinued. The recommended replacement, if there is one, is also noted.
